I invested a part of myself in this world
filling the hours with sea-green, cavernous hallways and ragged lunchlines — as of now
I still own a locker the beige cubicle which holds my books
my thermos
 my winter coat
and in a heap, my notes (J J Thomson, discoverer of the electron $P = MV$
and the same to you, Prince of Denmark) what a wealth of knowledge can be harbored in 2-8-18 why, I could keep some tiny animal nestled there to feed it tidbits amid the seven-minute rush to keep its warm, live fur a secret my life would be complete but now I'm crushed beneath the roar of voices a nameless, faceless sound compressed in the corridors devoid of air and sunlight thriving upon itself and I think sometimes of deadlines (paper Tuesday test on Wednesday) all these people, do they feel?
why must they sleep, bent over desks as if to shield them — sleep, perhaps, is the only way and seven-forty-five is so early
so early
so early . . .

I came here not knowing and yet I leave knowing that I do not know — this school has been a shelter with silent arms to hold me now that I am to be on my own can it let me go?
